

GeoTech 2008

February 28/29 and March 1, 2008

Dallas, Texas

For 20 years the GeoTech Conference has provided a forum to inspire and motivate educators to teach about the Earth – its structure, societies, environments and their interplay – using a wide range of technologies. GeoTech brings together innovative presenters and teachers in all disciplines to share academic and technology innovations. Educators come to this conference seeking the latest in curriculum area content, technology information and training, and teaching ideas.

GeoTech 2008 offers a rich mix of activities spread across three days. On Thursday and Friday, (February 28-29), there are seventeen hands-on/interactive workshops centered around several strands: social studies, language arts, STEM (science, technology, engineering & mathematics), and geospatial technologies. Friday evening provides an informal setting with keynote speaker Dr. "Deepsea Dawn" Wright. Her keynote presentation will be on Saturday morning, kicking off the main GeoTech conference and exhibits. All conference presenters are leaders in the effort to integrate technologies and critical thinking across the curriculum in the K-12 classroom. Check out the calendar of exciting GeoTech 2008 events and sign up today! (www.bdhs.org/geotech)
